
COMPETENT PERSON TRAINING

COMPETENT PERSON TRAINING

Skin health surveillance is an essential element in most occupational skin management systems. It aims to detect skin problems at the earliest point so early action can be taken, such as:

- Identifying causative exposures and improved exposure management
- Advice and treatment to allow continuation at work
- Ensure others remain unaffected
- Advice and guidance to ensure high standards maintained

Frequency of skin checks will depend on a number of factors including available resources. All too often the frequency needed for skin checks does not meet the resources available in occupational health. This is when the competent person becomes invaluable. Competent people are trained to do simple skin checks so that they can be more frequent.

The ideal individual is one that will naturally see a group of people during their normal work. Training these individuals to be competent in carrying out regular checks on skin condition increases our resources. The increased frequency provides a more robust and effective system.

EnviroDerm Services has considerable experience in a wide variety of workplaces in providing training to enable persons designated as first line skin condition assessors to be competent in conducting regular skin checks.
